The god Apollo's first love was the nymph Daphni. As he pursued her, she transformed herself into a laurel tree. As the originator of the Pythian games, and as the god of royalty, Apollo was often depicted wearing a crown of laurel. As the founder of the Olympic Games, Apollo is associated with the Pythian Games and as the originator of the Olympic Flame, which is used to light the Olympic cauldron.

New York Matrimonial and Family Law firm Coffinas & Lusthaus has become the first stop for New Yorkers seeking resolution of their custodial issues, fair asset distribution, support and award enforcement amid marital and family distress.

For almost 20 years, Maria Coffinas and Meredith Lusthaus have limited their case load to provide quality, personalized service to their clients. They have built an outstanding reputation among their colleagues in the law and their many satisfied clients. ‘Meredith and I had a similar vision of a firm that would really focus on individual client needs,’ Coffinas says, adding. ‘As working women, we have a unique perspective to offer and know how to really get things done.’

Both partners have extensive experience in all aspects of New York matrimonial and family law. They use their knowledge of the law and procedure to implement creative strategies that benefit their clients and often set precedent for future cases. Ms. Lusthaus says, ‘We are always practical and do not have a lot of time for nonsense. We apply that principle in and out of the courtroom.’

The firm prides itself on successes assisting monied spouses retain their assets, as well as aiding non-monied spouses receive their financial due. The partners also boast an equally impressive track record of award enforcement. As Ms. Lusthaus says, ‘Without enforcement, the awards are useless to our clients.’

In 2011, a wealthy husband attempted to coerce a one-sided settlement from their client, a stay-at-home mother. Ms. Lusthaus obtained a court order for $30,500 per month in temporary support, plus housing and additional expenses, including her attorney fees. This year, a derelict spouse failed to pay the multimillion-dollar award of property, counsel fees and appellate counsel fees that they secured for her after trial. Ms. Coffinas obtained an order to incarcerate the spouse. After a few nights in jail, he paid every penny their client was due.

But Coffinas & Lusthaus has done more than resolve cases at the lower court level. They have helped shape the development of the law through their numerous victories, on appeal. A thorough list of the firm’s landmark cases and achievements can be found on its website, www.coflus.com.

Additionally, the partners have become well known in the legal community, attaining memberships, accolades, and leadership positions in various notable organizations. They are both AV Preeminent* rated by Martindale-Hubbell® and have also received the Client Distinction Award from Martindale.com and Lawyers.com.

An American Dream Story, With A Silicon Valley Twist

By Dan Alexander

Aster Data founded Tasso Argyros remembers when his father headed to the United States for a piece of the action in 1988, and how his grandfather founded a Greek bank in the U.S. and created a family dynasty.

"I brought this very early on, and, I think, I wanted to do something that I understood, that I felt was important," Argyros said. "I wanted to have a strong connection to my parents, and what we would be doing.

Argyros is a Greek billionaire and the CEO of Aster Data, an analytics company based in Santa Clara, California. He is also the son of Greek American entrepreneur George Argyros, who founded a fortune in the U.S. market, with the aim of increasing sales, production, and job creation in Greece. Argyros' family history is a testament to their commitment to entrepreneurship and innovation, and how companies can make a difference in the world.

Heard Off the Street: Psaros based his career on a bold experiment

By Len Boselovic

Michael Psaros and KPS Capital Partners, the private equity firm he co-founded, have made plenty of investors happy by reviving troubled U.S. manufacturers with the help of unions.

The firm’s most recent success was Global Brass and Copper, a Schaumburg, Ill., manufacturer that KPS acquired in November 2007, a month before the onset of the Great Recession. Investors in the KPS fund that acquired the metals producer have received $650 million in distributions since their investment since 2008.

The fund’s most recent success was Global Brass and Copper, a Schaumburg, Ill., manufacturer that KPS acquired in November 2007, a month before the onset of the Great Recession. Investors in the KPS fund that acquired the metals producer have received $650 million in distributions since their investment since 2008.

In 1983, Mr. Psaros’ father, John Psaros, bought a Metaphors company from its owner, National Steel. Mr. Psaros, a young trainee at Bear Stearns, was “the junior gopher on the deal team,” he said. He remembers Mr. Keilin telling him, “I’d like to work with you,” he recalls telling Mr. Keilin. “He was very professional.”

A year or so later, after Mr. Psaros joined another Lazard colleague, Ron Bloom, to form KPS Capital Partners, he told Mr. Bloom, “I’d like to work with you,” he recalls telling Mr. Keilin. “He was very professional.”

The firm advised the United Steelworkers and other unions that represented workers at distressed companies. “They were using what I call the high road form of investment,” says 1200 president Lee Ger-ard. “We had too much in mind and so we were waiting to hear what the union vote would be.”

Workers backed the deal, which was engineered by Lazard Freres investment banker Eugene Shapiro. Mr. Psaros, 46, says the union vote was crucial to making KPS a success, because it helped make KPS successful de- spite the daunting challenges it faced.

The transformation made Global Brass and Copper bankable. KPS took a minority ownership stake in the company and advised the United Steelworkers, which did not include pension or retiree health care obligations. They saved a lot of jobs. They are remarkable at it,” said Edward J. Goulston, president and chief investment officer of the Dietrich Foundation.

“We had to teach both Psaros and Bloom how to actually do real negotiations. They learned that through the union,” Mr. Goulston said. The CEO who oversaw the revitalization of Global Brass was John H. Walker, former president and CEO of Weirton Steel. After KPS acquired the business from Oli, the company negoti- ated a 65-week labor agreement with eight unions that did not include pension or retiree health care obligations. When Weirton Steel sold its operations to Chassis Brakes International, one of Global Brass’ largest customers, the company’s new owner reportedly wanted to cut about 20 percent of the salaried workforce. “The fund sold its last 912,000 shares Feb. 3. Although Mr. Psaros lives in Purchase, N.Y., he says he still owns a home in Weirton and has Steelers season tickets on the 50-yard line. Mr. Psaros’ friends say some of that loyalty can be attributed to his commitment to church and family. He is a devout Greek Orthodox Christian who met Mr. Psaros when they were both in high school at the time. He now has a home in Weirton and his grandfather is buried in the church’s cemetery.
