A CHANGED AMERICA

Demetrios shared his own personal experience with President George W. Bush, who approached the bishop in the rubble, in tears. He knelt down and asked Demetrios: “I’ve been searching all night for my brother-in-law, who surely must be dead.”

Demetrios shared his own memories with President Bush at Ground Zero. Demetrios remembered speaking with President Bush at that moment, and he knelt down and approached the president and asked: “Are you sure you cannot be certain he is dead?”

Demetrios continued: “We began a Triangle, at which point a group of soldiers arrived. They asked if we would join them for one, big prayer, and we did. We hoped that we would be able to make one of the men and women who had been inside the Twin Towers – what we did not know at the time that they were all dead!”

Demetrios remembered speaking with President Bush at the site, and he asked: “Are you so certain he is dead?”

To which President Bush replied: “Because he never would have left the building until he made sure everyone else was evacuated, and since we know that not everyone had evacuated, then surely he must have remained inside as well.”

But Demetrios had his own doubts, and he expressed those doubts to the president: “I know that not everyone had evacuated, then surely he must have remained inside as well.”

President Bush replied: “It should be completed by next year.”

Political Correctness and National Security: 14 Years after 9/11

By Constantine E. Scarra

I term the piece contained herein “Archie, the Meathead,” for, as I wrote it just two weeks after September 11, 2001, it was, of necessity, my view, the first of its kind piece I ever wrote for The National Herald and it was a few years before I began to write how it submitted at a guest columnist – it was published on July 10, 2003.

In that piece, I wondered: “Will our steadfast support of our country’s foreign policy fade once again as in the crisis wanes?” Will we become disengaged once Osama bin Laden has been captured, killed, or declared dead? I intended under the Bush-(Dick) Cheney-(Donald) Rumsfeld meted to an almost-all-time low, later his approval ratings plummeted the frequency imple-

The Freedom Tower is beautiful and stands even taller than the Twin Towers did, but it is noticeably different in appearance, a stinging reminder of what happened to its predecessors. Continued on page 5

President Bush Speaks to a Joint Session of Congress Nine Days after 9/11

September 26, 2001

Mr. Speaker, President Pro Tempore, members of Congress, and the American people:

It is a moving speech heard around the world that shortly thereafter President Bush provided to a record-high 90% approval rating. President George W. Bush was sworn into office on September 20, 2001, just two days after the tragic and momentous events of September 11th. The Speaker, the Majority Leader, the Minority Leader, and members of Congress come to this chamber to pay tribute to the men and women of America who have stepped forward in the wake of these events. Tonight, no speech could be more fittingly dedicated to the American people who have been so moved to action by the tragedy to see Republicans and Democrats joined together in a great cause — so noble, so strong, so selfless — and to pay tribute to the men and women of America who have stepped forward in the wake of these events. Tonight, no speech could be more fittingly dedicated to the American people who have been so moved to action by the tragedy to see Republicans and Democrats joined together in a great cause — so noble, so strong, so selfless — and to pay tribute to the men and women of America who have stepped forward in the wake of these events.

President George W. Bush speaks to Congress just nine days after 9/11. He united the nation to support the American people and laid out a vision for the future. The day after the terrorist attacks, he addressed a joint session of Congress, promising to lead a global coalition of freedom fighters to support and fight terrorism...

John Katsimatides Memorial

A heartfelt honoring John Katsimatides, one of the thousands of American soldiers killed in the September 11, 2001 attacks at the World Trade Center, and one of a few who were of Greek descent. This image is placed along the main road of Mantiki, the capital town of his native island Nisyros. The Katsimatides family is the most influential in the Greek mining industry – which belongs to Nisyros.

September 11, 2001: A challenge to find inspiration in a tragedy, but it gets easier by looking at the design of the even-to-be-state-of-the-art reconstituted and reconstructed St. Nicholas Greek Orthodox Church at the new World Trade Center.
